The good-first theory analyzes value claims in terms of "good" simpliciter, while the value-first theory analyzes "good" simpliciter in terms of value claims. The good-first theory corresponds to the thesis that states of affairs are the "primary bearers" of value; the value-first theory corresponds to the alternative thesis that it is things like pleasure or goodness (or perhaps their instances) that are the "primary bearers" of value.

Value Theory (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

A good theory should explain the observations or results of an experiment or phenomena, being understandable to a lay person while also being reasonable enough to allow for further testings. A good theory should also be frugal in their nature so others can test it, and they should also be predictive.
